Access to Justice Considerations for State and Local Courts
as They Respond to COVID-19: A Conversation

Conducted: April 3rd, 2020.

Summary: This webinar offered attendees access to justice ideas for courts, and assisted with the curation of access to justice best practices. The presenters solicited input and ideas for how the judiciary can improve responses nationally, statewide, and locally during the pandemic crisis.

Presenters: Danielle Hirsch (moderator), Stacey Marz (panelist), Erika Rickard (panelist), James Sandman (panelist).

Presenter Bios:

- Danielle Hirsch is a Principal Court Management Consultant with the National Center for State Courts. She provides advanced management consulting work to courts and their partners at the state and local level, primarily focused on access to justice issues in the courts. She is currently providing public access and fairness information related to the pandemic crisis along with the CCJ-COSCA Rapid Response Team.
- Stacey Marz is the Administrative Director of the Alaska State Court System. She supervises the administrative operations of the Alaska judicial system. She has worked for the court system for sixteen years, dedicating her efforts to improve court operations to be more streamlined and to provide positive customer experiences.
- Erika Rickard is the Project Director of Civil Legal Modernization, PEW Charitable Trusts. She leads Pew's work to modernize the nation's civil legal system, a project to pilot and evaluate the most promising technologies and tools to assist people without access to a lawyer. These include online dispute resolution, which brings the entire court process online, so people can resolve their cases without going to a courthouse; and legal information and assistance portals, which use interactive technology to identify legal problems and direct users to information and resources tailored to their needs.
- James Sandman is the Chair of the ABA Task Force on Legal Needs Arising Out of the 2020 Pandemic, and the former President of the Legal Services Corporation. His Task Force works to identify legal needs arising from the pandemic, and makes recommendations to address these needs while helping to mobilize volunteer lawyers and legal professionals to assist people who require assistance.

Addressing Court Workplace Mental Health and Well-Being in Tense Times

Conducted: June 25th, 2020.

Summary: Anxiety and stress in returning to the workplace in the midst of COVID-19 and budget challenges loom large in the minds of judges and court staff. Added to this dynamic is the national focus on racism and its rightful demands on the justice community, including trial courts. How can court leaders address these challenges and promote a mentally healthy workplace and environment? Trial courts need constructive, empathetic, and effective leaders. This complimentary 90-minute webinar will identify and illustrate leadership tips and resources to help court leaders better support judge and employee mental health and well-being as courts cautiously resume full operations. Former Congressman Patrick J. Kennedy (D-RI), Founder of the Kennedy Forum and Co-Founder of One Mind at Work, will be joined by Garen Staglin, Founder of One Mind and Co-Founder of One Mind at Work, to discuss why mental health in the workplace is important, share insights on what court leaders can do to address this issue, and provide valuable resources for webinar participants to access. A moderated discussion will follow with court leaders from Massachusetts and Iowa on the practical challenges, approaches and solutions they have devised. Time will be allotted for audience questions.

Presenters: Patti Tobias (presenter), Hon. Paula M. Carey (presenter), Hon. Mark D. Huppert (presenter), Patrick J. Kennedy (presenter), Hon. Lawrence E. Marks (presenter), Christopher T. Patterson (presenter), Garen Staglin (presenter), Jonathan S. Williams (presenter).

Essential Steps to Tackle Backlog and Prepare for a Surge in New Cases

Conducted: July 19th, 2020.

Summary: State courts across the country mostly shut down in mid-March due to the COVID-19 pandemic. While some courts transitioned quickly to a remote working environment, physical courthouses were generally closed for in-person proceedings, including jury and bench trials. As a result, state courts face a large backlog of civil and family cases waiting for judges and court staff as they resume slightly more normal court operations. Complicating the task of tackling backlogs is the specter of a surge of civil and family cases in the coming months due to the economic impact of stay-at-home orders in most states. For judges and court staff, “working harder” will not be enough to fully address either the existing backlog or increased civil and family caseloads, especially given expected cuts to judicial system budgets and as court resources are shifted internally to address similar backlogs on criminal dockets. At the same time, and perhaps now more than ever before, courts have an obligation to use resources wisely and work efficiently, and to do so in a way that does not compromise access to justice or jeopardize critical and well-established principles of procedural fairness. During this webinar, respected state court leaders discuss essential steps to make civil and family case processing more effective, efficient, and fair to litigants.

Presenters: Alicia Davis (moderator), Paula Hannaford-Agor (moderator), Judge Jennifer Bailey (speaker), Judge Gregory Sakall (speaker).

Presenter Bios:

- Alicia Davis, J.D. is a Principal Court Management Consultant for the National Center for State Courts, with particular emphasis on data-informed strategies for continuous quality improvement. Ms. Davis has experience in all aspects of justice sector planning and performance improvement, including work with judicial and corrections institutions, public defender and social welfare services, with a focus on access to justice for traditionally marginalized groups, including women, juveniles, and indigenous communities. An expert in high-performance court frameworks, Ms. Davis has conducted operational assessments, facilitated participatory evaluations, and designed standard operating procedures for numerous judicial sector institutions and facilitated a number of strategic planning efforts that have resulted in measureable improvements in court functioning. Experienced in adult learning techniques, Alicia has provided training across the country to judges, attorneys, and other professionals, from organizational development to implementing best practices specific to child, family and probate law. Alicia represented children and parents in truancy, delinquency and child welfare proceedings for several years before entering court administration.
- Paula Hannaford-Agor is a Principal Court Management Consultant with the National Center for State Courts, and is the Director of the Center for Juries Studies. She regularly conducts research and provides technical assistance and education to courts and court personnel on the topics of jury system management and trial procedure, civil litigation, and complex and mass tort litigation. Fair and Efficient Handling of Consumer Debt Actions:
Key Steps and Tools to Implement Now

Conducted: November 5th, 2020.

Summary: Consumer debt hit a high of $14.3 trillion just as the pandemic hit, leaving millions of newly unemployed workers without a regular paycheck to pay existing debts and putting them in the position of having to rely on credit cards to pay essential household expenses. These challenges to American finances are likely to extend many years beyond the pandemic crisis, leaving some to speculate that the “coronavirus pandemic is set to metastasize into a debt collection pandemic.” This webinar highlighted key steps and tools that state courts can implement now – without statutory or rule changes – to ensure that consumer debt actions are managed fairly and efficiently.

Presenters: Hon. Graciela L. Freixes (presenter), Paula Hannaford-Agor (introduction), Justice Deno Himonas (presenter), Brittany Kauffman (moderator), Stacey Marz (presenter).

Handling High Volume Dockets:
Spotlight on Eviction Diversion Programs

Conducted: June 16th, 2020.

Summary: Given the anticipated numbers of eviction filings across the country as various local and state eviction moratoriums are lifted, the need to think creatively about how to handle high volume dockets like evictions is more important than ever. This webinar will focus on two creative eviction diversion programs planned for the State of Michigan and the City of Philadelphia. In sharing their ideas and experiences, panelists will speak to the role state and local courts can play in developing diversion programs and modifying court rules and procedures in response to these eviction dockets, as well as highlighting the potential for partnership with executive branch leaders, community and human services partners, mediation centers and the private bar to address this growing and urgent need. In addition, panelists will offer ideas as to how courts could partner with executive branch offices to use Coronavirus Relief Fund resources (“CARES Act”) to assist with eviction diversion efforts. Panelists will also share new national guidance on how courts should approach the management of their traditionally high volume dockets, including, but not limited to, eviction cases.
