STUDENTS STAND AGAINST BULLYING
As part of this commitment, NCSC developed the Justice Case Files series of graphic novels to teach students and young adults about how the courts work. In addition, NCSC holds a civics education essay contest each year in recognition of Law Day, May 1. In 2015, the essay question for elementary and middle-school students focused on bullying, which was the central theme in NCSC’s most recent graphic novel, Justice Case Files #5: The Case of the Cyberbully.

Student response was overwhelming – NCSC received more than 300 entries from 17 states. Essays ranged from why people bully, to how to protect someone who is being bullied, to how to stop bullying. Some wrote about personal experiences, others were passionate about what society can do to stop bullying. NCSC wants to share students’ words, emotions, and solutions to the pervasive problem of bullying. This booklet is a collection of essays and quotes that represent students’ attitudes.
"Everything was going great until someone you thought was your friend started calling you names and verbally tearing you apart."

-Brenda Call, Grade 6
Lake Stevens, WA

"I was bullied because of the food I ate, and my cultural accessories..."

I learned the bullies were ignorant about my culture and insecure about themselves. I realized that education was the best way to deal with bullying. Instead of focusing on punishment, we should help bullies understand why they hurt us. Our school started a culture corner so students learned cultural diversity and understood how we were different and similar to one another.

-Priyanka Fayson, Grade 4, Barnesville, MD

"Could you be any uglier?, the girl yelled through the crowded hallway. I watched as my best friend went running into the bathroom. It was that moment I realized I should have said something but it was too late."

-Maelyn Reynolds, Grade 6
Lake Stevens, WA

"I want to stop bullying so...

I can spend more time learning fun things. I love learning at school, though sometimes it is tough there. My favorite place in school is recess, but bullies have more chances to be mean then. I won’t fight with anybody, but I will use my words to stand up for myself and speak loudly enough that someone can come to my rescue. I will be nice to someone who is a bully so the bully can learn how to act respectfully to someone, and maybe even earn a chance to be my friend."

-Chase Lamb, Grade 4, Mechanicsville, VA

"You are such a loser,' she said to me. Everyone turned my way and started laughing. I was angry, sad, and it felt like I did not belong because I am different. Bullying is an issue because, when you are bullied, it doesn’t feel good. You feel alone, and empty. One way that we can/will solve this problem is by helping others not to feel bad. Another way is that we can be nice to the bully. I know this would be hard to do, but you can try. We are all different from each other, and that is okay."

-Alexys Hust, Grade 6, Lake Stevens, WA

I believe bullying is a huge issue that needs to be addressed with effort. It is a horrendous thing to go through if you are in a bullying situation. This could be the downfall of our nation, betraying our own kind instead of looking out for each other and having empathy. We have to think about the future and if we really want bullying to go on, leading us to hatred, betrayal, and unwanted self-harming. Plus, a child getting bullied could possibly have very little to no self-confidence because of what has happened to him/her, which could prevent him/her from growing up and coming up with amazing ideas, or doing great things. I am positive that our powerful country does not want that at all! Sometimes in life, you have to think ahead and ignore selfish needs. This is why I believe that bullying should be stopped today.

- Bryce McKenna
Grade 7
Warrenton, VA

This could be the downfall of our nation, betraying our own kind instead of looking out for each other...

What's the issue?

With the Internet...

Bullying has become more common and is very hurtful. Approximately 160,000 U.S. teens miss school every year for fear of being bullied. There are three R's that are important guidelines to follow when you see someone bullying: recognizing, responding, and reporting. First you have to recognize the bullying. Bullying is always one sided, and happens more than once. Once you recognize that bullying is taking place, you need to respond by being assertive and telling the bully to stop. After this, it is important to report what has happened to a teacher, or another adult that you can trust.

- Locksley Kolakowski
Grade 8, Mill Creek, WA
Bullying is a social epidemic that has the potential to degrade our nation. Bullying affects an extensive group: the bully, the bullied, the bystanders, and the school. With cyberbullying, it has become pervasive and seemingly unstoppable. The harmful effects, such as criminal behavior, depression, truancy, and suicidal thoughts can advance to adulthood. Instead of punishment, bullies should be given an opportunity to express themselves in a safe environment without judgment. Schools should offer programs that focus on self esteem, cultural diversity, and life skills.

-Idira Fayson, Grade 6, Poolesville, MD

“Bullying is such an issue and some people choose to do nothing about it because they are scared. We live in a society where people are so quick to judge someone by their appearance, and they don’t know what that person could be going through.”

-Kristen Adams, Grade 6, Lake Stevens, WA

“Bullying. One word that can mean so much. Pain. Harassment. Being an outcast. These are the reasons that bullying needs to be addressed. No one deserves these feelings. What can we do to stop it? Two words, tolerance and acceptance. What I mean by these words is that we need to tolerate people who view the world differently than we do and accept them for that. We also need to accept people who break out of this mold we put people in.”

-Victoria Martison, Grade 8, Lynnwood, WA

“Bullies are everywhere; at work, at school, in your neighborhood.

However, this isn’t something we should just sit back and accept. One in three U.S. students have reported being bullied, but this isn’t just a number, it’s a life. Classmates should stand up for the victim. What the victim needs the most is to have support. Bullies have a rationale, and need guidance to visualize it. Punishing the bully will not solve everything. Parents and teachers need to become approachable to discussions.”

-Sanam Parwani, Grade 8, Glenshaw, PA

As a community, we need to focus on the bully by showing empathy, not antagonism...
With the ever-evolving world of technology and social media, bullying has continued to change, becoming a larger and harder problem to solve. Cyberbullying is a new concept that is appearing on social media. It is harder to solve because bullies can be anonymous and are harder to track down.

- Lynzley Kolakowski, Grade 8, Mill Creek, WA

Years of being bullied builds up mounds of anger and hurt, and when people act out in rage it ends up hurting themselves and others. In any situation, our words and actions bite, making little wounds that we remember, whether it’s a look or the way someone acts, it lowers our self-worth. Every person is valuable, and you can remind him/her of that. Be aware of those who are hurting. Reach out to them with compassion. Be brave and don’t be afraid to stand up for others.

- Celia Teague, Grade 7, Monroe, WA

“Physical, verbal, relational, and cyber are all forms of bullying, and they are all ways to destroy a person. Bullying is detrimental to any person: it causes depression, anxiety, low self-esteem, and at the most extreme being suicidal. The majority of kids know what bullying is but they don’t know how severe it is until it happens to them. Everyone needs to be taught how to stop bullying.”

- Amy Roth, Grade 7, Warrenton, VA
Other forms of bullying include making fun of someone, calling people names, saying insults, spreading rumors, being shoved, beaten, spit on, or excluded from activities, being threatened, being forced to do something you don’t want to do or having your property destroyed or damaged.

Bullying is a complex issue with many influences and risk factors. If you see bullying going on, tell a teacher or an adult you trust, try to talk the bully out of doing what they are doing, use your words and not your fists to stand up to the bully.

92% of 3rd - 5th grade students said they felt sorry for students who were bullied, but sympathy often does not translate into action.

Cyberbullying can often be more damaging emotionally and more hurtful than physical bullying.

Fear of retaliation from the bully, being afraid they will be called a tattle-tail, and lack of confidence that adults will help.

Other reasons kids remain silent:
- Fear of retaliation from the bully, being afraid they will be called a tattle-tail, and lack of confidence that adults will help.
- Many children do not report bullying to adults, a trend that becomes more pronounced as children become older, specifically seen more in boys.

Be more than a bystander! Stand up, speak up, and speak out against bullying.
WAYS FOR COPING

“When possible, disregard the bully, particularly for one-time cases. Divert attention, try thinking about what you’ll do next weekend. Surround yourself with positive people who know you and will boost your confidence. Try to get help, including friends, older brothers and sisters, teachers, or parents. Remember, everyone has a right to live, work and play in an environment free from bullying, harassment, discrimination, and violence. Do not stand up for a bully, stand up for the person who is getting bullied. We need confidence too so we can be successful.”

-Samanvitha Javagal, Grade 5, Glendale, AZ

“Kids witness bullying everyday, but don’t know how to react. One of the most useful, but underutilized methods is making a joke out of it. For example:

(Bully): “You run like a girl!”
(You): “I know, so try to keep up.”

Everyone likes a little humor once in a while.”

-Michael Kokolis, Grade 5, Williamsburg, VA
“Physical contact never solves a problem. Take a stand. Speak up...”

“Model respect for others.”

“Bullying can cause depression, anxiety, and even suicide. The person being bullied usually struggles in defending themselves, so we have to help. Parents can model tolerance and respect for others. They can monitor computer and phone activity. Teachers can watch for signs of bullying and show support and concern. We can be kind to those who are targets of bullying. We can remind each other that we are all different, not better or worse, just different.”

-Josiah Buskirk, Grade 8, Lilburn, GA

“No one likes being bullied so why let it happen in our community?”

- Ethan Queen, Grade 6, Lake Stevens, WA

“Bullying needs to be addressed because all it does is harm others. The solution: kindness, awareness, and forgiveness. When someone offends you, kindness would be the least expected act of revenge. Some people do not know the brunt of their words; they need forgiveness for past mistakes to help cease bullying.”

- Katie Ross, Grade 8, Mukilteo, WA

“There is always a light at the end of the tunnel in situations like bullying. Don’t feel like you’re trapped, you always have solutions.”

-Dominique Luna, Grade 5, Glendale, AZ

-Camille Saverino, Grade 3, Greenville, NC
“Students at my school are often teased for being in the minority. The school tries to fix this through longwinded assemblies, but those don’t change the way people act towards each other. What we really need are ways to get to know each other so that we don’t judge each other for our differences. Schools could do a once-a-week field day where students have to work in groups to solve problems. Students would soon become friendly with each other by overcoming challenges together. Once all students become friends with one another, they will no longer want to tease each other.”

-Rebecca Yermish, Grade 7, Marlton, NJ

“Bullying distracts you from learning and forming healthy friendships. It can affect a person both mentally and physically by causing eating disorders, depression and anxiety. I can step in when someone is being bullied, report the issue, and befriend the victim. Schools can use natural consequences to stop bullying, including community service, such as maintaining a school garden or fostering an animal in the classroom so students can learn compassion for other living things. Parents can volunteer so all kids receive guidance and positive attention. Schools and families must have ongoing discussions to raise awareness about all types of bullying.”

-Kai Hartmann, Grade 8, Lynnwood, WA
If you are bullied, you should be strong. I came up with a different meaning for the word strong.

Strong also means:

- Stand up for yourself
- Trust friends and teachers
- Remember to be the bigger person
- Only talk to teachers, friends, and family about this
- Never let a bully get to you
- Go and stop the bully

-Victoria Bliley, Grade 5, Williamsburg, VA

“Classmates can step in and stop the bully. Parents can stop bullying by going to the school or talking to the parents of the bully. I can stop bullying by stepping in when I see it happening. If bullying is going on in your school, step up and stop it.”

-McKenna Edge, Grade 8, Minden, LA
“WE’RE ALL SPECIAL IN OUR OWN WAY. YOU DON’T HAVE TO BE THE SAME TO FIT IN, SO BE DIFFERENT.”

-Anastasia Halacy, Grade 5, Williamsburg, VA
